Kind: captions The boys, we are giving them more social qualities to be kind and beautiful, helping and caring. We are giving the girls much more of individual attention individual qualities they are experiencing being thrown taking space, etc. The school uniform is unisex all the play material is unisex we need to fight early to work on their stereotypical ideas of boys and girls because they are 2 years old when they have formed this gender identity and they become so gender traditional. I did it because of my experience. Having boys and girls together and seeing again and again how they were looking at each other learning what they were not supposed to do. In all boys' groups, somehow the gender is disappearing. Nothing is boyish. If the kids are accepted with a much broader idea of how a boy can be. It is the same with the girls. If you have never tried a part of the life then you don't know if it's good for you or not. I will not look at kids and see gender pressing them down. A shift would help them be the best they can be.
